Vol. 22 No. 1

Executive Director's Column

by Aaron Megquier

Editor's Note: This column first appeared in our 2014 winter issue (Volume 13.1) of Forever Wild. The Plants of Baxter State Park field guide was published in 2016, and presents scientific descriptions of all 857 known plant species in the Park. Proudly offered in our bookstore for many years, this guide is one of our best-loved books.

I spent some of the happiest days of my childhood exploring the hidden corners of Baxter State Park. Often with my Dad, and sometimes with newfound independence, I went bushwhacking up the headwaters of Wassataquoik Stream, wading through alder swamps on my way to Weed Pond, and scrambling up rock faces in Pogy Notch.

I didn't pay much attention to identifying what I was looking at – that interest would come later as I followed a path into conservation biology and botany – but my appreciation for what I saw was boundless. I'm sure I walked right past some plant species that have yet to be documented in the Park almost thirty years later. That is about to change, thanks to the Plants of Baxter State Park project. Highlighted in our feature article on this page, this is one of the most important things to happen to the Park since Governor Baxter made his first gift of land in 1931. Think for a moment about how much plants impact your experiences in the Park. We hike through living tunnels of trees, pull ourselves up the Saddle Trail with birches worn smooth from generations of hands, and take shelter behind stunted spruces on the Tableland.

From an ecological perspective, plants are the foundation of the Park's ecosystems. They support every other living thing, from grey jays to moose. And yet our knowledge of them is incomplete at best. The Plants of Baxter State Park project aims to figure out what plants species are found in the park, where they grow, and how they are doing and put this information in the hands of Park staff. It will

The Girls of Baxter

By Barbara Blackburn Beaulieu

In the 1970s, the Blackburn girls, Karen, Barbara, Rena, and Gail, were the girls of Baxter. Our dad, George Blackburn, was a Park Ranger at Abol and Katahdin Stream Campgrounds when we were young. Thinking back to the summers spent in Baxter State Park, I recognize we had a remarkable childhood experience that, being kids, we took for granted. Every year, we spent our entire summer living in the Park, exploring, camping, hiking, swimming, fishing, and developing a deep love of the woods and the mountain.

Many mornings we ran with my dad, who was former military. We must have been quite a sight, running through the campground, following him like a row of little ducklings. Sometimes, we got to sleep in a lean-to or tent site if it wasn't used by campers that night. It was great fun sleeping in tents and lean-tos and having girl-sized campfires. Sometimes we stayed in a cabin at Daicey Pond and went canoeing on the pond. We were natural explorers, and as we got older, we thought we had much more freedom, unaware that the Rangers were keeping an eye out for us. We could even invite friends to stay with us from time to time. Every summer, we hiked most trails in the Park and up over the mountain.

We loved going places with our dad. We all wanted to ride in his big green Park truck. One of our favorite trips was going to the dump when he emptied the big trash barrels. During that time, it was an open dump site and a popular spot for visitors because the sound of the barrels would be like a dinner bell attracting bears, including sometimes also make this information accessible to the public through a beautiful, full-color field guide. We would welcome your involvement and support on this project. I helped out with three days of field research in the north end of the Park last summer, and it's like being a kid on Christmas morning! Volunteers are welcome, but there are many other ways to help that don't involve hiking boots or hip waders. If you'd like to support this effort, or take part in it yourself, please get in touch.

Member Stories

Editor: Rachel Spatz Bidstrup
 Membership Coordinator

In the last newsletter I announced the creation of this Member Stories column. In this space, we seek submissions from our members of writing, visual art, photography, etc. Our prompt last time was FORTITUDE. Below is the beautiful submission we received from member Robyn Norris of Bangor.

FORTITUDE noun: Strength of mind that allows one to endure pain or adversity with courage. Synonyms: courage, pluck, grit, backbone, strength.

In 2013, I didn't even know the correct route from Bangor to Acadia National Park until I asked an acquaintance to take me. Not only was that the start of a dear friendship, but since then, I have traveled all over Maine, hiking, camping, and playing summer tourist. These days I do what some people don't ever try — I do everything alone.

It seems every year, there is a Facebook Maine Hiking post by someone afraid to hike alone, especially as a woman. I tell her she can thrive on the trail, stay safe, and enjoy solitude in wilderness. Everyone joins in on those threads, and she, armed with new trail preparedness and well wishes, goes on to love her adventures. In recent years, I have taken that to a new level.

Last fall, I undertook my second 3-night camping trip to Cozy Cabin at Nesowadnehunk by myself. I was fearful of all kinds of things, such as not having enough water (I think 10 gallons is enough), or the oil pan being struck by a rock on the dirt road (campers are famously helpful to stranded drivers), or what if the camp stove doesn't work, what if all

I had four milestones that first night: the camp stove, campfire, wood stove, and the tricky gas cabin lamp. Once I had all those working (thanks to tricks my dad, a volunteer firefighter, taught me growing up), I knew I was home free. I settled in, roasted hot dogs, watched the sun go down, and got a great night's sleep. The one thing left to contend with was the hindrance I live with every day: chronic pain.

Pain naturally contains daily fear for me. On the trail, I have to constantly be mindful of roots, rocks, and the precise location of places to rest and turnaround points. It is simpler for me in Baxter because I've known from childhood which trails are easy: the first mile of Double Top, Elbow Pond, Kettle Pond, and Sandy Stream are a few. The key to the trip was learning how to use a hot water bottle and first-aid ice packs for pain management.

I hiked about an hour a day. In the evenings, I did long yoga workouts in the field. I kayaked on Kidney Pond. I didn't compare myself to thru-hikers and climbers, nor did I wish I had anyone with me. I sketched, cooked, drank hot tea, read, and mostly stared at the sky and meditated to the sound of fire. It was an intense spiritual sojourn brought about by the willingness to face fear and pain. In other words, it was the adventure of a lifetime.

The prompt for next time is CLARITY. Send by mail to our address on the left, or by email to rachel@friendsofbaxter.org before May 1st.

cubs. Usually, they would stay a safe distance from the vehicles, roaming the dump and picking through the trash for food. The Rangers monitored the dump to ensure people stayed safely in their cars and didn't feed the bears. In the past, I had witnessed bears fighting over some goodie in the trash. Seeing the bears was always exciting until a day that would impact me for years.

It was my turn to go to the dump with my dad to watch him empty the barrels. When we arrived, there were no bears to be seen, and before my dad emptied any barrels, a modified bus drove in. My dad said he would be right back. He walked to the other side of the dump to check out the vehicle he didn't think was allowed in the park. I watched him talk to the driver then saw my dad enter the bus to check it out. Just as he disappeared inside the bus, a bear, who smelled the barrels, approached our truck from behind. It climbed right into the back of the truck! It was so close to me as I looked out the back window. I was terrified and crawled to the truck's floorboards and cried for my dad to come back. He was there in a flash. He shouted and the bear ran off.

I had nightmares about bears for years! The dream finally stopped about ten years ago when I spent a week at Katahdin Lake. There was a bear roaming near the campground. I wanted to leave, but I was proud of myself for overcoming my fears and staying put, and I have never had the dream again. Living in the Park made us aware that bears are wild animals, not like Yogi Bear.

My mom, Jean, would chauffeur us from place to place in the Park. She would plan picnics at Abol Beach or take the four of us girls for an afternoon on the sliding rocks. One time we walked into Sandy Stream Pond to see the moose. We hiked about a mile and climbed out on a big rock to view the pond. We happened to come between a mother and a baby moose. The mother moose chased us down the trail. Just when we thought she was gone, she would return and chase us some more! At the time, we were too young to understand how dangerous a moose could be. We girls were laughing as we ran through the muck because we couldn't run fast enough on the planks laid out on the trail. We ran all the way back to the trailhead. Then covered from head to toe in mud, we laughed all the way to the campground. I don't remember my mother ever hiking with us again.

I have many fond memories of my time at Baxter Park. My sisters and I have hundreds of favorite stories about the Rangers, the things we did, and our parents. We all still visit the Park often. I am an artist and get my inspiration from the outdoors. I have painted beautiful Katahdin many times. My sister Gail owns the 100 Mile Wilderness Inn in Millinocket and spends her days with hikers, shuttling them to the Park. She's the proud owner of the topographical model of Katahdin from the

by Ellen Baum

I have spent enough time this winter learning about Artificial Intelligence (AI) that I thought I would see how my last column as President would read if I asked Open AI Playground for help. The result was not as bad as I expected. With not much prompting, the essay I got back – in nanoseconds – had some of the facts right, though it missed the mark on some important details and lacked personality – or at least my personality.

Because AI integrates and repeats back what it has been fed from multiple sources, it was able to capture some details about the Park and now-known challenges of the past four years, challenges that I didn't see coming.

I imagine that AI would have been as wrong as me trying to describe, in April 2019, what a President of any organization would have to deal with.

From my vantage point, on the "got it right" side of the ledger, what I envisioned for my tenure as President might have included a new strategic plan; bringing on terrific new staff and saying goodbye to a wonderful employee; a re-designed website; and facing tribal questions.

President Ellen Baum, who shepherded Friends through COVID-19, a successful endowment fund campaign, and our 20th anniversary celebration is retiring at our annual meeting in April.

During a period fraught with so much uncertainty, something I didn't miss out on – and AI didn't touch on – was spending time in the Park. I carefully looked at the new bridges on the Roaring Brook Road, meant to look overbuilt in 2020, but which may be exactly what is needed for future storms. I hiked Katahdin with a mask at the ready to celebrate not just my August birthday but also the 100th anniversary of Percival Baxter's first ascent in 1920. In 2021, I slogged in a water-filled trail up to Davis Pond then onto Hamlin Ridge seeing more chanterelle and hedgehog mushrooms than I have found in my entire life. Last fall, I walked out from Russell Pond in a heavy downpour, but, luckily, Wassataquoik Stream was still crossable. And, importantly, I didn't miss out on my favorite season – winter. With my intrepid group of women friends, we skied along streams, bushwhacked over blowdowns, watched otters cleaning their dens, and celebrated the moon over Katahdin.

Poet laureate Ada Limón describes how the natural world quiets one enough to let settle a sense of being something larger. "Even as a child, I was that person that would deeply look at the animals and the trees and feel like they were as important as whatever I was learning in the classroom and as important as ideas." Amen.

I didn't ask AI for help imagining what lies ahead in the next five years. This crystal balling is all on me.

My friend Alice insists that 70 is the new 60, but 75 is 75. In case she is right – and I hope she is not – that gives me a four-year window for so many outdoor activities and geographies that I already love or expect to love.

Katahdin has time on its side. Formed over 400 million years ago, it will do just fine weathering human- and nature-induced events to come.

My wish list for the Park? Staffed at full capacity, directed by a strong leader. A management plan for the next decade with the Deeds of Trust as the bedrock and a vision for a future that confronts issues that Percival Baxter could not have imagined. Re-built Daicey cabins that do an even better job than the current cabins at housing and enchanting visitors. Plenty of snow and cold during the winter season for all the ecological reasons that are needed as well as to haul supplies and materials for year-round maintenance and summer season stocking. A reservation system that doesn't have employees and visitors pulling their hair out.

And for Friends of Baxter State Park? I hope that we will be on the other side of COVID and can run the Baxter Youth Conservation Corps at full tilt, meeting the needs of local teens and serving the Park. I want us to grow into our new mission, where support of the Park is front and center but is expanded to consider surrounding and related communities – how they have historically been connected with lands in and around Katahdin and how new relationships develop going forward. I wish for time and resources to take on what we see as our role. I wish for funders to continue supporting what we are doing, for members to continue valuing our work, offering help and suggestions, and for staff with their deep and growing knowledge and skills.

My AI-"commissioned" essay ended with this: "I am grateful to have been a part of the Park's mission to preserve and protect this natural wonder." That is not exactly what I would write, but it's closer than I might have expected. I thank all of you for the honor in letting me get to work with and know you, even when only virtually.

Update from Baxter State Park

Editor's note: The material in this article was drawn from an update written by Natural Resource Director Nava Tabak and presented to the Baxter State Park Authority at its recent meeting on December 2, 2022. It has been edited for brevity.

This season the Park saw:

- 58,342 visitors
- 62 % day users
- 50 % Maine residents
- 18 % visited the BSP Headquarters Visitor Center
- 68,830 people made reservations
- 2,901 Registered AT hikers

Staff oversaw major road improvements on the 2.5 mile long South Branch Pond Road, replacing over 30 culverts, installing 6 new culverts, adding, cleaning, and defining roadside ditches. Contractors screened 3,500 and 3,000 yards of gravel at the Nesowadnehunk and East Branch Pits, respectively, for use in this project and other road projects.

Infrastructure improvements included installing a new solar system for the Daicey Pond ranger station, and construction of a new lean-tos at Katahdin Stream and Roaring Brook Campgrounds.

Trail crew projects included: cleared blowdowns from 175 miles of trails, installed 30 stone steps on the Dudley Trail, repaired plumbing and replaced a roof at North Branch Camps, replaced 150 feet of Togue Beach retaining wall, replaced six trail bridges, and 300 feet of bog bridging. The trail crew included Adopt-a-Trail volunteers, the Maine Appalachian Trail Club Stewards, and the Appalachian Mountain Club.

Other crews included Friends' Baxter Youth Conservation Corps. A five-member team joined staff to replace bog bridging on the Katahdin Lake and OJI trails. They also performed corridor maintenance on Katahdin Lake and Martin Ponds Trail, and replaced a section of the Togue Beach retaining wall.

In mid-October, Park roads and trails sustained damage due to two major rain events that occurred in close succession. Two hundred feet washed out on the Roaring Brook Road and minor damage occurred south of Katahdin Stream Campground. This damage was repaired the same day as the storm. The Park's quick response was expedited by pre-storm preparations such as staging equipment and loading dump trucks the day prior to the storms. Staff proactively identified storm-susceptible road locations, and completed the replacement of 1 culvert, the addition of 2 culverts, and improvement of multiple side drains. A log jam at the Katahdin Stream culverts was cleared between the two storms, likely preventing serious damage to this road crossing.

Trails throughout the Park sustained significant damage from the two storms. In particular, the Chimney Pond Trail suffered major scouring along the portions of the trail that parallel Saddle Brook, and now has multiple trenches over a foot deep and several stone structures that require rebuilding. Many bog bridging sections throughout the park were swept off the trail and require resetting. The full extent of damage to trails is still being assessed, and repairs will begin in 2023.

A&A Brochu, LLC which recently acquired Pelletier Brothers, Inc. has indicated their intention to continue executing all of Pelletier's existing contracts with the Park, which includes timber harvesting in the Scientific Forest Management Area.

Eighty-three volunteers contributed a total of 2,700 hours of their time to the Park in 2022. Large volunteer groups included the Mitchell Scholars, Friends of Baxter State Park's Maine Youth Wilderness Leadership Program, Appalachian Mountain Club, and ME Appalachian Trail Maintainers. Post-COVID the program was fully restored and volunteers were honored at a banquet held on November 6th. In addition to volunteers, we honored the Maine Association for Search and Rescue (MASAR), the ME Warden Service, ME Forest Service, ME Army National Guard, Millinocket Airport, and Millinocket Fire & Rescue.

Volunteer projects in 2022 included: loon count, lynx survey in SFMA, Katahdin arctic butterfly survey, canoe inventory, Earth Day litter patrol, campground upgrades, new lean-tos, building firepits, painting and carpentry, repairing picnic tables, landscaping, grounds work, stacking firewood, cleaning ditches and culverts, opening and closing campgrounds, cleaning flood debris, and repositioning bog bridges on the Wassataquoik Trail. Thanks go to volunteer coordinators Georgia Manzo and Bruce White, and other staff who plan and oversee specific volunteer projects.

Winter reservations opened in November. The first day, we processed 96 reservations, and an additional 13 the next day for commercial users. The most popular site in winter is the bunkhouse at Chimney Pond. Before the end of the first week the bunkhouse was almost booked for the season. Other very popular sites include the bunkhouses at Roaring Brook, South Branch Pond, and Nesowadnehunk Field, as well as the winter cabins at Daicey Pond. Abol Campground is very popular for commercial groups and other winter campers seeking to summit Katahdin, as it provides the quickest access.

Membership Survey We want to hear from you!

While you are kicking back this winter, contemplating your next journey to Baxter State Park, please take a few moments to complete our 2023 Audience Survey.

We would like to hear your feedback to understand better the interests and opinions of our members and other stakeholders. Your input is vital to our continued success. Participating in this survey can help make our work more effective and ensure that our beloved Baxter State Park remains Forever Wild!

Please join us for Warm Winter Weekend

After a three-year hiatus, we are thrilled to invite our members to Warm Winter Weekend 2023! This is one of our most popular member activities. This event will be held on March 16 - 19 at New England Outdoor Center. We have reserved space for thirty people to sign up. Winter activities abound at NEOC, such as snowshoeing, cross-country skiing, snowmobiling, ice fishing, and sometimes just sitting around and relaxing. Side trips to Baxter State Park, Katahdin Woods and Waters National Monument, Penobscot River Trails, and the Debsconeag Lakes Wilderness Area have taken place in the past. We all enjoy meeting old friends and developing new relationships. The cost will be about $300 per person for the entire weekend. To make a reservation, please call New England Outdoor Center at 1-800-766-7238 and be sure to mention you are with Friends of Baxter State Park.

Baxter State Park Trivia

What is the shortest route, by trail, from a roadside trailhead to a named summit in Baxter State Park? Please send trivia answers to Rachel Spatz Bidstrup at rachel@friendsofbaxter.org.

Answer: Trivia Question in Fall Newsletter

In our fall newsletter, we asked: What is the highest elevation pond in Baxter State Park that is not reachable by trail? (Bonus points if you have bushwhacked to it)

Congratulations to Rick Young for answering correctly and to Eric Hendrickson and Thom Davis, for answering correctly with extra points for bushwhacking!

-Highest pond without a trail I would think would be Klondike Pond. I have been there several times using the slide just to the southeast of the pond leaving from the large boulder on the NW Peaks trail. Even ran into park staff on one trip. -- Fine day to be out adventuring!!!! ~ Eric Hendrickson

-I am guessing Klondike Pond. ~ Rick Young

-I think that the highest elevation pond in the park not reachable by trail is Klondike Pond, which I visited with Chimney Pond Ranger Chris Drew in July 1973. ~ Thom Davis

Lichens at Work on Blueberry Knoll

By Cope MacClintock and Howard Whitcomb
Reprinted from the Fall 2006 Issue of Forever Wild

For two old-timer cousins doing a three-day stay at Chimney Pond in late July, Blueberry Knoll provided a perfect rain-day alternative hike. The area was replete with ripe blueberries, pale bog laurel, and mountain cranberries. From the Knoll, there is a grand view of Katahdin Lake.

At first glance, the topography of the North Basin points to a relatively simple glacial history. Indeed, this Basin, along with the others on Katahdin, with its classic Alpine features, clearly was made by valley glaciers. Valley glaciers are local, form on mountain slopes, and erode their way back into the rock, forming cirques, tarns, and aretes (Hamlin Ridge, for example).

These valley glaciers formed during the times of waning and waxing Pleistocene continental glaciers that covered New England. Continental glaciers originated in the build-up of ice in Labrador.

When glaciers melt, they leave behind piles of debris. In North Basin, a question arises on the origin of the debris on the valley floor after the retreat of the last glacial ice. Most authorities say that, as the last continental ice sheet melted away, a valley glacier did the finishing touches on North Basin, leaving behind, as it melted away, recessional moraines, one east of the tarns (Blueberry Ponds) and the other, Blueberry Knoll. But wait a minute, not so fast. P.T. Davis argues that the last glacial ice in the Basin was continental, and that all depositional features in North Basin were left behind as the ice melted. One clue is the presence of erratic boulders comprised of a rock type different than the local bedrock, which in North Basin is all granite.

Our contributions to the debate support both alternatives. Along the valley wall on the north side of Blueberry Knoll is a sharply incised eastward draining gully. If this is an erosional feature, it could only have been formed by large volumes of rapidly flowing water, presumably from a valley glacier melting rapidly as it receded westward. One for the valley-ice guys. On the other hand, we actually found an erratic boulder made of lava that probably came from Traveler Mountain ten miles away. One for the continental-ice guys.

After glaciation, there was no soil. Lichens, able to live on bare rock, started the process of making soil by eating away rock as they grew. All who walk the Maine woods have seen lichens on rock, but only rarely is one privileged to see delicate lichen blisters containing tiny rock chips lifted up off the rock surface revealing the early stages of soil formation. We saw such a boulder in North Basin.

Dacey Pond Campground Closing for Repairs

by BSP Staff

Baxter State Park will close the Dacey Pond Campground from May 2024 to April 2025 to repair the cabins for continued public use. The public will continue to have day-use access to the area for other recreational activities, such as hiking and fishing. The campground is expected to re-open for the 2025 season.

Q: Why now?

A: Without repairs that go beyond routine maintenance, the cabins at Dacey Pond Campground will deteriorate to the point of needing replacement.

Q: Why will the whole campground be closed?

A: After carefully considering all possible options through a robust review process, the Park Authority, Advisory Committee, and staff have determined that a complete campground closure will have the least impact on the wilderness experience of campground users and will be the most time and cost-effective way to accomplish the necessary work.

Q: Will visitors still be able to fish, boat, and hike around Dacey Pond next year?

A: Yes. We anticipate that there will be access for day use at Dacey Pond and the surrounding trails.

Q: Will the project change how the campground looks and feels?

A: Designs for the repair work will, as much as possible, maintain the cabins' unique aesthetic and character.

This project is in its early phases of planning, and further detail is not yet available. The Park will provide additional information on its website when it is available.
